What is it like to attend this early years setting?

This provision meets requirements

The staff offer an exciting range of sports-focused activities that engage the children. The children are keen to come to the camp and discover the activities staff have planned for the day. They talk about their favourite games, such as fort building which is particularly popular with many of the children. The staff use the morning group activities effectively to remind children about the rules and expectations of behaviour at the camp. They treat the children with respect, listen to what they say and remind them to talk to a team member if they have any concerns or need support throughout the day. This helps children to settle and gain a sense of belonging at the camp.

Staff have a good understanding of the general interests of the children. They work closely with parents to support all children, including those with special educational needs and/or disabilities (SEND) and children who speak English as an additional language. They ensure that children are not rushed and have time to explore the environment and engage in their chosen activity. For instance, older children enjoy playing football with the support of a professional coach. The younger children investigate the large, outdoor play equipment. They climb and balance to develop their physical skills as they take managed risks in their play.

What does the early years setting do well and what does it need to do better?

- The provider plans engaging events throughout the day that have a strong emphasis on sport and team building. Staff use various activities effectively to help children build self-confidence and foster friendships within their groups. For instance, during the parachute game, staff call out children's names to encourage them to get to know their peers better. There is lots of laughter and fun as the children run underneath the parachute and carefully navigate their way to the other side. The children enjoy engaging in exciting play activities and are learning to work collaboratively as a group.
- Staff communicate well and work together to ensure that all children are appropriately supervised throughout the day. They are flexible in their approach and adapt activities to meet the diverse needs of the children. For example, staff recognise that some children may benefit from a quieter environment and plan accordingly. They set up additional resources outside the hall for children who need a break during sports activities or who require a calmer space. These contingency plans ensure that the staff meet the needs of all children, including those with SEND and English as an additional language. There is a clear focus on children's well-being.
- The management team provide parents with a wealth of information before their children start at the camp. They have established good communication links to keep parents informed about care needs and daily activities. The group of younger children has a consistent key person, ensuring stability and familiarity during their time at the holiday camp. All parents, whether regular users of the service or new to the camp, comment on how happy their children are to come to the holiday camp.

- Staff have high expectations of children's behaviour. The children are exceptionally well behaved. They are kind to their friends and polite. For instance, the children make sure that their friends are okay and help them find equipment so that they can join in with the soft archery activity. Staff make good use of praise to recognise children's kindness and cooperation as they take turns and share resources. However, there are some occasions when the movement between activities becomes hectic, which can be overwhelming for some children and disrupt the smooth flow of the children's routine.
- The leadership and management arrangements are well established and highly effective. They have strong recruitment, training and induction procedures in place to ensure they maintain children's safety and welfare at all times. The provider constantly evaluates the service offered to make sure they meet the needs of the children and families who use them. For instance, they are at present exploring the addition of more craft-based activities to enhance what they already provide for children. There is a clear commitment to evolving and expanding the services provided.

Safeguarding

The arrangements for safeguarding are effective.

There is an open and positive culture around safeguarding that puts children's interests first.
